LIFE INSIDE AN IMAGE

The rise of Irish artist Gerard Byrne has been as rapid as it is inevitable, with a growing oeuvre of works that turn history into an uncanny playground. Leaping nimbly across video, photography and installation, his reconstructions of conversations between historic figures make strange their subjects while recasting past eras in an eerily artificial light.

Byrne's work and his influence on other artists is displayed across two exhibitions at iconic Melbourne institutions this October - Monash University Museum of Art (MUMA) present with Life Inside an Image.

A museum is a frame that transforms its contents. It freezes them in time, fixing their meaning. But what if the museum itself becomes the subject?

Gerard Byrne's newly commissioned Jielemeguvvie guvvie sjisjneli (Film inside an Image) 2015 — 16 is the central work in an international group exhibition where each artist turns their attention to the museum as a technology of capture and attempted control.
